

BECKY HAMMON

Becky Hammon, a 1999 graduate of Colorado State University (CSU), set numerous records at the university playing basketball and was recruited by the New York Liberty of the Women's Basketball Association (WNBA), where she played point guard. She went on to coach basketball, becoming the first female coach in the National Basketball Association (NBA), serving as an assistant coach for the San Antonio Spurs. Her outstanding achievements at CSU earned her the honor of having her jersey and her number, 25, retired in a ceremony at Moby Gym in 2005.

EARLY LIFE

Becky was born in Rapid City, South Dakota. Her athletic ability and love of basketball came to the fore when she began playing the game at Stevens High School where, in her junior year, she was named South Dakota Miss Basketball. In her senior year she was voted the South Dakota Player of the Year. Graduating from high school in 1995, she was voted the best female athlete by her graduating class.

COLLEGE CAREER

Although she was overlooked by many college recruiters, being considered too small (five feet six inches) and too slow, an assistant coach at Colorado State University saw her play and recruited her. She played basketball so well at CSU that many of her records still stand. Becky did not let being shorter than average stop her. Playing for the Rams, she made All American three times and was named Colorado Sportswoman of the Year. In the 1998-99 season she helped the team advance to the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Sweet Sixteen tournament after they had posted a 33-3 season record.

Her records include all time points, 2,740; points per game, 21.92; field goals, 918; three-point field goals, 389, and 538 assists. The Women's Basketball Coaches Association (WNBA) awarded her the Frances Pomeroy Naismith Award as the best senior player under 5 feet 8 inches. She was inducted into the Colorado State University Sports Hall of Fame in 2004. She was also designated as ESPNW's Woman of the Year.

PROFESSIONAL CAREER AS A PLAYER

Becky signed with the New York Liberty women's basketball team in May, 1999. She soon became a fan favorite, and in 2003 she took over as Liberty's starting point guard. Despite having that season cut short by a knee injury, she scored her 2,000th WNBA career point in 2005. In the off season she played with Rivas Futura in the Spanish League.

Traded to the San Antonio Silver Stars in 2007, Becky earned the nickname “Big Shot Becky” thanks to her ability to make shots at critical moments. That year she earned a career high average of 18.8 points per game, fourth best in the league, as well as leading the league in assists.

Becky led the Silver Stars to a WNBA record of 24-10 in 2008, earning them a spot in the playoffs. In game one of the playoffs she scored 30 points, but her team was defeated in the final game by the Detroit Shock. In 2007 she became the seventh player in WNBA history to score 5,000 points.

In order to compete in the Olympics, Becky became a Russian naturalized citizen in 2008, joining the Russian team in the 2008 and 2012 Olympic Games.

In 2015 Becky was inducted into the Ring of Honor, which recognizes players who have “made the most significant contributions to the Liberty’s tradition of excellence and to the growth of the WNBA.”

COACHING CAREER

A torn ligament in 2013 spelled an end to Becky’s career as a player. The next career step was coaching. During a year-long rehabilitation she often attended the National Basketball Association’s San Antonio Spurs practices, coaches’ meetings and games, where her opinion was frequently sought. In August, 2014, the Spurs hired her as an assistant coach, making her the second female coach in NBA history. Head coach Gregg Popovich praised her work ethic, her basketball IQ and her ability to build personal relationships.

“When she speaks,” said one of the Spurs players, “I’m all ears.” Another player said of her, “Becky Hammon can coach NBA basketball. Period.” In December, 2020, Becky made history as the first female acting head coach when Popovich was ejected from a game against the Los Angeles Lakers, leaving her in charge.

She has been part of an all-star coaching staff and served as the first female head coach in the NBA’s summer league in 2015.

Becky was not only the first female full-time assistant coach in the NBA, she is the first female assistant coach in any of the four major sports, football, basketball, baseball and hockey. She has set many records and earned numerous accolades and is an outstanding example of what women can achieve.
